Excerpt from The Parterre: A Collection of Flowers Culled by the Wayside To The Reader. As gentle rains recall the drooping flowers, And moisten and revivify the soil - So, a few pearls, culled in my leisure hours, Perchance, may prove a tribute for my toil. And if, the while, there dwell within one heart A hidden germ untouched by sunshine yet, May this meek offering of my Muse impart A moral ray that heart will ne er forget - To call it up from its secluded bower, A full, rich, fragrant, and untainted flower.
