My interest in GER began in the early nineties when, as a pediatrician, I was uncomfortable passing babies off as having colic. I still remember a mother coming into my office with her one-month-old baby who sounded like she had typical colic. The mother said to me, Dr. Bill, I know my baby is hurting somewhere and Im going to camp out in your office until you find out why she is hurting. This mother encouraged me to keep searching for why her baby hurt, and the cause of the colic turned out to be severe gastroesophageal reflux. Since that time, I have replaced the term colicky baby with the more accurate description the hurting baby, and it turns out that many so-called colicky babies actually suffer from this...
