Not illustrated. 1902 Excerpt: .lens, a single one of quartz three inches in diameter and of twenty-two inches focus, was stopped down to one inch by a cardboard diaphragm. In front of it two spar prisms 60 each of inch x 1 inch face cut in a plane perpendicular to the optic axis of the crystal were fixed upon a wooden support. The deviation of the combination was nearly 90 and the spectra obtained were nearly four inches long from D3 to the extreme ultra-violet, the distance between H# to K being 1-2 inch. The solar image as given by the chromospheric rings in K and H was 0 22 inch in diameter. Fig. S: Two-prism spar and quartz prismatic camera with slide. The focussing glass and six plates 4 inches x 2 inches were carried in a long slide which opened automatically on being raised to the position of first exposure by a projecting spring clip on the sliding shutter coming in contact with the bottom, edge of the camera and was held in position by a spring detent at the side; subsequent exposures were made by pushing back the detent and raising the slide till the detent caught into the next following notch. The camera was fixed on a wooden frame let into the ground and strengthened with boulders on the same general plan as that used with the slit spectroscope. It was placed to the west of the latter instrument so as to catch the light from...
