Excerpt from First Annual Report of the Laguna Marine Laboratory: At Laguna Beach, Orange County, California, May, 1912 A man's education most perfectly adapts him for the greatest success in any phase of human endeavor only when it has included thorough training in scientific method - accurate observing, truthful recording, and logical correlating. Biology - the study of life - as an element in education (and so in the progress of the human race) represents one of man's most intimate and fundamental intellectual activities - it is the study of his own life forces and of the myriad influences that determine his own setting in nature. The sea, that limitless fountain-head of immeasurable life, which without cultivation has yielded so much to the nurture of the human race, which with cultivation can yield as much food as our best agricultural lands, and which, one day, when the land is crowded with teeming millions, will go far toward feeding the then existing peoples - the sea, I say, presents a multitude of pressing problems of infinite...
